VINTAGE AIRLINER TAKES GIRLS ON FLIGHT AND LOOK WHO'S ON THE FLIGHT WITH HER!!
OUR OWN HELEN (HOPPY) ADAIR

VINTAGE DC 3 TOOK GIRLS FROM FRONTIERS OF FLIGHT MUSEUM ON THEIR FIRST AIRPLANE FLIGHT! The floor vibrates, and the girls' chatter is drowned out by the roar of the engines. Sofia clutches the arm rests and giggles when the plane hits a bump. Two girls in the row in front of her squeal like they are on a rollercoaster when the DC-3 flies through a particularly turbulent patch. But 84-year-old Helen Adair seems at ease. Adair is a former flight attendant for Braniff International Airways who last flew on a DC-3 in the 1950s when she worked for the now-defunct airline. She recalled how much the DC-3 would bounce in the sky because the vintage plane doesn't have pressurized air and flies at a lower altitude than modern aircraft.

"We used a lot of sick bags," she says, patting the seat in front of her.

Every girl on the flight, the youngest is 11, takes a turn walking toward the cockpit and watching the pilots fly. The windows are open, and one of the pilots rests his arm on the window's edge.
